The process of globalisation is transforming every society into a plural and diverse reality. However, the political tradition of European nation states is proving ineffective in managing the emerging diversities. On the other hand, South Asian countries, particularly India, are historically plural societies; have relatively better record of governing diversities but facing a serious challenge of governance as they embark on the project of nation-state.

Dr. Anwar Alam works on areas like International Politics, Politics in West Asia and South Asia, Political Theory and on Religion and Politics. He defended his Ph.D. at the School of International Studies, Jawaharlal Nehru University (JNU), New Delhi, on the “Role of Religion in State Policy: A Comparative Study of Egypt, Iran and Saudi Arabia”. His forthcoming publication is “For the Sake Of Allah: Origin, Development and Discourse of Gulen Movement”.
