Crossing the Border between Life and Death for Satirical Effects in the Webtoon Sin kwa hamkke (Along with the gods, 2010-2012)

Abstract:
Since at least 2015 South Korean society has been massively criticized, mostly from within, as being “Hell Chosŏn,” where Chosŏn, the name of the last Korean royal dynasty, is used as an equivalent to South Korea. The Naver webtoon Sin kwa hamkke by Chu Homin can be understood as a forerunner of the Hell Chosŏn discourse. In the webtoon the readers travel with the protagonist through different kinds of hell, which turn out to be satirical versions of contemporary South Korean society. While the satire in the webtoon has a clearly subversive character and can be understood as social criticism, at the same time the webtoon also has strong nationalistic tendencies. Although the pantheon of hells, as it is portrayed in the webtoon, actually draws from diverse sources of different provenance and is therefore a prime example of intracultural multiculturality, Chu Homin constructs a culturally homogenous picture of the hellish pantheon, thereby emphasizing its pure Koreanness. This paper explores how different codes are mixed and switched in the webtoon for satirical and nationalistic purposes. This play with different codes demonstrates how nationalistic reductionism tends to obscure intracultural multiculturality, thereby concealing not only one of the strongest appeals of Sin kwa hamkke, but of Korean culture in general.
