Abstract

Since the publication of the dataset on early numeracy that we provided to the clio-infra.eu database, a number of additional sources have been discovered which will allow to calculate numeracy for the following countries and half-century periods.

Content

Numeracy is an important component of overall human capital formation. However, while data is available quite early and in many countries, the sources are sometimes difficult to locate. The following list gives some hints in which types of archives, books, and other sources such information can be obtained. Since the publication of the dataset on early numeracy that we provided to the clio-infra.eu database, a number of additional sources have been discovered which will allow to calculate numeracy for the following countries and half-century periods.

The year always gives the beginning of a half-century period. Please see the analysis by Baten and de Pleijt (2021) for a calculation based on the following sources. The countries are abbreviated using the ISO2-standard (also used in email addresses)
