Network Analysis as Resource: the Structural Exploration of Entanglements in the Ancient and Medieval World

The ubiquity of terms such as “networks”, “brokers” or “connectivity” has provoked some scholars to proclaim a “relational turn” in the humanities. This also led to an increasing number of quantitative and structure-related studies, using data sets of various size and a diversity of software tools. Results range from “mere” visualisations to complex agent-based models. Johannes Preiser-Kapeller will provide an introduction to network analysis and uses examples from the ancient and medieval Mediterranean and Caucasus to show the potential, problems and pitfalls of these approaches.
