Transformation of legal instruments in EU environmental law

International Workshop as part of the DFG-funded project

Introduction

The international workshop addresses a multi-dimensional process of transformation of legal instruments in EU environmental law including climate law and the law of biodiversity. In one dimension, EU institutions increasingly choose regulations instead of directives as legal forms of fundamental acts of EU environmental law. A second dimension is the establishment of “iterative planning procedures” in order to pursue long-term environmental goals. These procedures span supranational and national administrative institutions and are subject to recurring evaluation and recommendation by the European Commission. In a third dimension, delegated regulations of the European Commission are increasingly important, for example, in the governance structures of the Taxonomy Regulation. The multi-dimensional transformation of legal instruments raises a range of questions of EU primary law.
