

Islamic Spiritual Care and Ethics

in Modern Contexts

Spiritual Care is an elemental part of religious life. The call for qualified chaplaincy for Europe's Muslim population is on the increase. In Europe as well as in other Western and Muslim countries new pastoral and ethical concepts, theories and approaches need to be developed in accordance to the societal situation. It is recognized that this should be achieved through the analysis of traditional Muslim pastoral counselling and ethics as well as in confrontation with present intellectual discourses.

Since 2016, the Center for Islamic Theology at the Eberhard-Karls-Universität Tübingen offers a Master's degree in "Practical Islamic Theology for Spiritual Care and Social Work". In July 2017, the Center holds an international conference on Islamic Spiritual Care and Ethics in Modern Contexts. It wants to offer a platform to compare, reflect and discuss the situation and the developments of contemporary Muslim Spiritual Care and Ethics in various European and other Western and Muslim countries.

The following issues will be addressed

- Differences and similarities of the respective experiences in Europe, the USA and the Muslim World;
- Is there a concept of common Muslim ethics and/or do Muslims need a new (common) concept of ethics, for instance in the areas of medicine and social life?
- Which methods of Islamic counselling are in use and what kind of challenges exist in different contexts that we are facing?
- How can Muslim intellectuals benefit from the interdisciplinary and interreligious research in these fields to develop new, innovative approaches and paradigms for ethics?
